We wanted to make a simple admin panel considering the lack of time we have. We intend to use similar design on all three panels. A product panel would have add and delete product and may have other features at the later stage of our development.

Product Side: (Below)

Description summarized:

The header includes options for returning to the home page, searching for items, viewing account info, and viewing the account's cart. This serves as general navigation in an easy-to-find place so that users don't get lost on the site.

The main content of the page includes a grid of product images, along with the names and prices of each item. Users can click on an item to go to the product detail page.

The sidebar contains filtering options, using checkboxes to select options for price ranges, brands, ratings, and sizes/colors for masks.

The footer includes page navigation within the search. This allows users to see how many total results there are for their search, as well as what results are being displayed, and lets them navigate between pages of results.

The main content of the page includes a large image of the product, along with the product's name, price, and rating. Underneath this is a description of the product and its details.

The sidebar contains additional images of the product. Users can click on these images to change which image is displayed in detail in the main content of the page.

The footer includes related products, so that the user can compare with other products to determine what is best for them.
